These are the parameters used for layout analysis. In an actual PDF file, text portions might be split into several chunks in the middle of its running, depending on the authoring software. Therefore, text extraction needs to splice text chunks. In the figure below, two text chunks whose distance is closer than the char_margin (shown as M) is considered continuous and get grouped into one. Also, two lines whose distance is closer than the line_margin (L) is grouped as a text box, which is a rectangular area that contains a "cluster" of text portions. Furthermore, it may be required to insert blank characters (spaces) as necessary if the distance between two words is greater than the word_margin (W), as a blank between words might not be represented as a space, but indicated by the positioning of each word.

MÔ TẢ :

Specifies the output format of stream contents. Because the contents of stream objects can be very large, they are omitted when none of the options above is specified.

With -r option, the "raw" stream contents are dumped without decompression. With -b option, the decompressed contents are dumped as a binary blob. With -t option, the decompressed contents are dumped in a text format, similar to repr() manner. When -r or -b option is given, no stream header is displayed for the ease of saving it to a file.
